Book Buzz

Bonnie Easton

Publishers have been busy this fall season.

John Boyne (The Heart's Invisible Furies) plays a game of "what if" with his readers in The Weight of Angels. Anglo-Irish playwright Oscar Wilde lived a short, tragic life when he fell in love with young Lord Alfred Douglas, whom he called Bosie. Bosie's father charged him with gross indecency, and he served two years at hard labor. He died a broken man of 46 in 1900. What if Wilde had lived into the 20th century? What path would his life have taken and what else would he have written to offer to the world of literature? Boyne attempts to answer those questions.

Few and Far Between by Jan Carson (The Raptures) is another "what if" story with an offer of alternative history. The location is a group of tiny islands off the coast of Ireland in Lough Neagh after The Troubles in 1958. The story is told through the eyes of quirky characters and with a touch of magic. They form their own sanctuary, but in 2017, the government wants to flood these islands due to a worsening environment. The last inhabitants, who had stayed there to escape the trauma of the political situation, are forced to leave. The story balances family dynamics and political history. Siblings Marion and Robert-John Connolly have spent most of their lives in the community and must now leave their homes.

Stations by Louise Kennedy (Trespasses) takes place in 1980s Ireland. Roisin and Red become friends until Red runs into some problems with local police and flees from his hometown to London. Roisin has her own family problems when her father abandons them, but she travels to London to spend Christmas with her Dad and finds Red. Will she ever stop longing for what they could have had together, or will she move on with her life?

The description of the story of The Counting Game: A Novel by Sinead Nolan reminds me of Tana French's first Dublin Murder Squad mystery series about children who take a walk in the woods and disappear. Nolan's book takes place in a small town in Southwestern Ireland in 1995. The woods has a reputation of being haunted. A brother and sister are playing the counting game on their walk in the woods to ward off any evil spirits that may be lurking there, but only Jack returns home. And he is too traumatized to talk. Thirteen-year-old Saoirse is missing. The police bring in a therapist to encourage Jack to talk about the experience of what happened to his sister, but the closer the therapist and Jack get to the truth, the more danger they find themselves in. Investigators must find Saoirse in time before she is harmed.

Skipshock by Caroline O'Donoghue (The Rachel Incident) is a coming-of-age story for teens who enjoy the fantasy genre. After her father's death, 17 year-old Margo is on her way to a boarding school away from home. She meets a young salesman named Moon on the train. They become fast friends, but when they arrive at their destination, she realizes she is not in Ireland anymore. Margo and Moon fall in love in this magical land where the season is always winter and a day is only six hours long. How does this adventure end? Readers will have to wait for the sequel.

Irish Times list of Best Books of the 21st Century countdown 25-21: Milkman by Anna Burns, Normal People by Sally Rooney, Star of the Sea by Joseph O'Connor, Soldier Sailor by Claire Kilroy, and The Bee Sting by Paul Murray.

Happy Reading!
