Bonnie Easton

Mystery/thrillers take center stage this month.

Rhys Bowen and her daughter, Clare Brayles, collaborated on Wild Irish Rose for another entry in the Molly Murphy series. Molly Murphy Sullivan has moved to New York City in 1907 and is seeing family and friends once again. She visits Ellis Island with a friend. Her husband, Daniel, is a policeman who comes home to tell her of a murder of a woman there that afternoon and the suspected killer looks exactly like Molly. Although she is no longer a private detective, she must investigate and clear her name.

Dervla McTiernan, born in Ireland where she worked as a lawyer for 12 years, offers The Murder Rule. This psychological thriller features a third-year law school student, Hannah Rokeby. She transfers to the University of Virginia to participate in the Innocence Project to study the cases of death row inmates. One case involves a report in which her own mother claimed a man had raped her and killed her boyfriend in 1994. Was her mother telling the truth at the trial?

Award-winning Northern Irish author, Adrian McKinty, has written a new thriller set in Australia. In The Island, Tom, a doctor, and his new much younger wife take his two daughters on an adventurous vacation to help the girls recover from the recent death of their mother. Tom drives too fast and runs over a woman and the family hides the body to cover their crime. The dead woman's family captures them and kills Tom, leaving the new wife and her stepdaughters to escape across the scorching desert. Lots of plot twists to surprise you.

Lady Annabeth de Lacey wishes to be apprenticed to Stephen Jennings in Lady of Galway Manor by Jennifer Diebel. Stephen runs the family jewelry store and is a descendant of the creator of the original Claddagh ring. The year is 1920, just as Ireland's political events are leading the country to their War of Independence. Stephen hates the British aristocracy and all that Annabeth represents. She looks down on the Irish "peasantry," but is anxious to learn all she can about Irish history and culture. Sparks fly. Great scene for a romance, right?

SEVENTEEN STEPS TO THE PUB

In my imagination (or is it?) I can hear the footsteps of the men, carpenters, electricians, pipefitters and hard workers, that made these 17 steps possible. Every week without fail they came together to work, laugh, sing and of course to hoist a few. Gone are many of these workers but their legacy lives on down these 17 steps.

I think at night when all is still you might hear the footsteps of all the great people who walked down these 17 steps. Many showband members and their following partied till the wee hours. Oh, the stories they could tell. They came from Ireland and Cleveland and they told stories about sadness and happiness. Gone are they but the 17 steps still echo with the good times.

And we cannot forget the cultural side of the 17 steps to the Pub. The dancers, speakers, listeners all flocked down these 17 steps to the Pub to the pleasure of the beholders. Some recalled their days in their home of Ireland while others became acquainted with the history of days past.

And who could forget the card players who did not play just to win (well, most of them) but to have fun. Friends were made down these 17 steps to the Pub.

And as we got weary of climbing those 17 steps to the Pub some kind souls had a chair lift installed to help the old bones manage and continue to be able to join in the fun. Also, it helped get those who enjoyed too much to climb up the 17 steps to the Pub.

Everyone has a story to share about the SEVENTEEN STEPS TO THE PUB.
