The Wildes: A Novel in Five Acts by Louis Bayard is a fictionalized account of the life of Oscar Wilde and his family. Wilde and his wife and their two sons appear to be happy until the arrival of young Lord Alfred Douglas in 1892. Constance Wilde comes to the realization that her husband has transferred his affections to his new friend. A scandal follows that results in his incarceration for gross indecency for two years and his wife and children retreat to Italy impoverished and in disgrace.

The Irish Girl: A Novel by Ashley E. Sweeney is a story about the Irish immigrant experience. In 1886, Agnes Coyne is just 13 years old when she is accused of incest and is forced to leave her country alone for the dangerous voyage to New York City. Her story takes readers from the tenements there to a life of prejudice in Chicago, just because she is poor and Irish.

Ordinary Human Failings: A Novel by Megan Nolan is a psychological thriller that takes place in 1990 with the mysterious death of a toddler whose body is found on an estate in London. She is the daughter of a teen aged mother. Ambitious journalist Tom Hargreaves picks up a scoop—the police suspect she was killed by the 10-year-old daughter of Irish immigrants. The tabloids exploit the family differences to sensationalize the story to sell papers and demonize the Irish family.

An Irish western? Kevin Barry offers The Heart in Winter: A Novel that takes place in Butte, Montana, in the 1890s. Irishman Tom Rourke is an assistant to a photographer who also earns a little extra by writing letters for illiterate men trying to lure brides from the East. In his spare time, he frequents bars and opium dens. Then he falls in love with Polly Gillespie, one of the newly arrived brides who had just married a mining boss, and they take off together for San Francisco. Along the way, they burn down a boardinghouse, steal a horse, and rob a safe. Just like in the old westerns, a posse is in pursuit.

Booker Prize winner John Banville is back again with a new installment to his Garret Quirke series with Drowned: A Novel. Quirke is a Dublin pathologist. In this story, both Quirke and his boss are dealing with personal issues. The new case involves a reclusive man, Denton Wymes, who finds an empty car with the engine running and its headlights on parked in a field. Armitage, who appeared in a previous Quirke mystery, approaches Wymes and claims his wife may have run out of the car and drowned herself. Detective Sergeant St. John Strafford arrives from Dublin to take charge of the case and brings Quirke along to investigate. Perhaps, all is not as it seems?

For a change of pace, there is Powerful Celtic Women in History: Warrior Queens, Priestesses, and Wise Women by Elise Baker. The Celtic civilization thrived in Europe from the 8th century BCE until the arrival of Christianity and had a great influence on Irish culture. The author, a librarian and archivist, asserts that women of the Celtic society enjoyed a status of power and influence in their own right. They played roles in their communities as priestesses, healers, and poets. Irish women of today still embody their spirit.

Oldies but goodies: Juno Loved Legs by Karl Geary, Prophet Song by Paul Lynch, The Linen Queen by Patricia Falvey, Northern Spy by Flynn Barry, and Good People by Hannah Kent.

More reading suggestions can be found at PadraicPearseCenter.weebly.com. Happy Reading!
